Wellbeing News

Physical Health

Participating in some form of physical activity can have a positive impact on a child's wellbeing. Engaging in regular physical activity will help your child in several ways. For your child to be motivated to participate in physical activity, it is important to find activities that are enjoyable for your child and appropriate for their age and fitness level. Encouraging a variety of activities and providing opportunities for your child to participate in sport, active games and fitness programs will significantly contribute to their overall wellbeing.

Participating in Physical Activity

By encouraging your child to participate in more physical activity will help benefit their physical health including:

- improve cardiovascular endurance/ overall fitness
- increased flexibility
- improved coordination
- muscles strengthened/ stronger

Improved Mental Health

Research has shown that children who participate in physical activity have better levels of mental health than children who don't. Exercise helps release endorphins which help promote feelings of happiness and wellbeing. Exercise will also reduce the amount of stress, anxiety, and depression your child may have, hence improve their overall mood and self-esteem.

Social Interaction

Participation in physical activities often promotes social interaction and social skills development. Many team games, group exercises, recreational activities and sports will provide your children opportunities to engage with peers in their age level, develop team skills and build friendships. The social support network will positively impact their wellbeing and sense of belonging.
